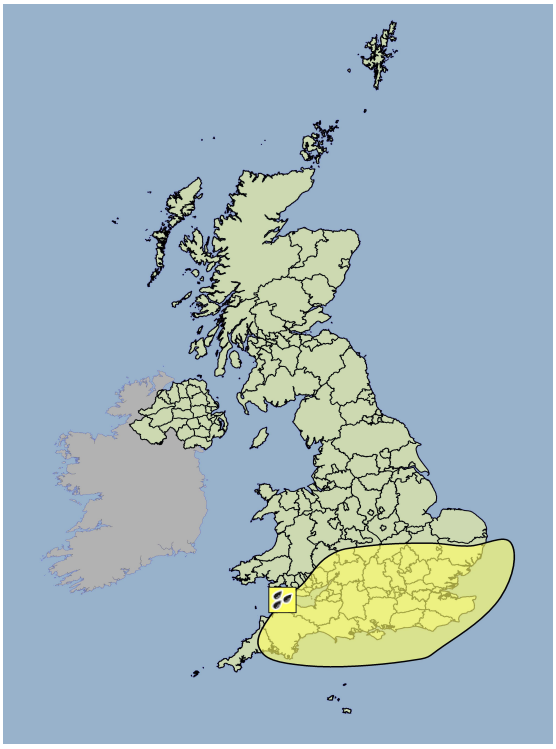
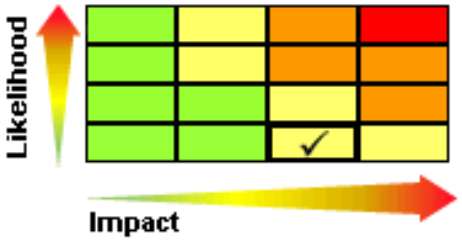
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A low pressure system is expected to run into the UK from the south on Monday morning bringing areas of heavy rain to the country, particularly southern England and southeast Wales. There remains some uncertainty over this development and the locations of the heaviest rain. However, there is the potential for 20-40 mm to fall quite widely with more than 60 mm possible in some places, much of this falling in a short period of time. With this coming after periods of heavy rain over the weekend there is scope for disruption from flooding.

With the uncertainties in this system, the alert is likely to be updated in the coming days.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:00 on Mon, 24th Aug 2015 until 18:00 on Mon, 24th Aug 2015

An area of rain will run into the UK from the south on Monday morning, with some locally very heavy bursts, particularly across southern England and southeast Wales. With this following heavy rainfall in these areas over the weekend, the public should be aware of the risk of flooding, including disruption to travel. In addition to this there is the potential for strong winds, particularly around exposed coastal areas.

This warning will be updated in the coming days.
